YOUTH KILLED BY TRUCK ON HIGHWAY JOB

Life of Albert Williams Is Snuffed Out Beneath Heavy Wheels

For the third time within the past two weeks the grim reaper stalked, through accidental causes, into a home in Daly City Tuesday forenoon of this week.

While at play eight year old Albert Williams, son of Mrs. Dora Williams, 578 San Diego avenue, this city, was crushed to death beneath the wheels of a truck which was being loaded with dirt and rock on the street widening job at the "Quarry" at the intersection of Mission street and Hillside boulevard.

It is stated the accident occurred as the youth slipped and fell under the heavy double tire wheels as it began to move.

The silent little form, with the head mangled beyond recognition, was first discovered by Foreman C. A. Wellman, owner of the equipment used on the construction job. Wellman could not see the body until the cloud of dust raised by the falling dirt had partially cleared away.

The remains were removed to the W. C. Lasswell undertaking establishment to await identification.

The body lay in the morgue for some time before being identified by a playmate, Dominic Compani, and the two brothers of the victim, Kenneth and Howard. The latter missed the younger brother when he did not come to lunch at the family home. When informed later that a boy had been killed at the quarry, they became alarmed and hurried to the morgue, where they identified the remains as those of their brother.

The deputy coroner, Mrs. Pepper, assisted by Officers Reardon and Benedetti of the local police department, examined all trucks which had been working on the job. They found that one driven by Frank Fahey, employed by the Sibley Grading Company was the one which caused the lad's death. Particles of flesh and blood were found adhering to one of the rear tires of this truck.

The driver was taken into custody for questioning. He stated he did not see the boy nor hear any screams or shouts. He was stunned by the stark tragedy. He was released on his own recognizance, to appear later at the inquest.

Bruce Davis, one of the boy's companions, informed the men working on the construction job, it is asserted, that the Williams lad tried to hook a ride on the truck and slipped, falling to his instant death under the wheels.

The Williams household already had known much brief and was plunged into deeper tragedy. The father died a number of years ago. The mother, Mrs. Laura Williams, has been suffering for some time with a heart ailment and is seriously ill, according to physicians.

The two older boys have been maintaining the home and attending to the wants of the mother and younger brother.

The funeral was conducted from the Lasswell mortuary at 3 o'clock yesterday. Rev. Joseph Logsdon of the Grace Church of the Nazarene conducted the services.

An inquest into the tragic death will be held next Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock.

CROCKER P. T. A. HAS ANNUAL OUTING

The members of Crocker P. T. A. held their regular annual meeting at Fleishhacker playgrounds on Thursday of last week. A number of the members arrived at the park early in the day and reserved a nice, sunny table.

Parents were loath to bring their children in contact with other children, owing to the infantile paralysis epidemic, consequently the attendance was not as large as expected.

After a lunch had been served, a short meeting was held at which the remainder of the business for the fiscal year was transacted. At the close of the meeting, the good will of the members of Crocker P. T. A. Unit were presented to the new president, Mrs. Clifton, by Mrs. Walker, junior past president.

Later all viewed the animals in the zoo.

All who atended were served with punch during the day, which was enjoyed, as the day was exceptionally warm.

About twenty-five mothers and children were present to enjoy the outing. They are all looking forward to the picnic next year.

D. C. THEATER BASEBALL CLUB SHOWS PROMISE

Number of Local Boys Are Trying Out For Places On the New Team

The newly organized Daly City Theater baseball team launched its season, Sunday, by holding the fast Carl Tassi team of San Francisco to a 5-5 tie. The game was called on a time limit—seven innings.

The turnout for the squad was very large and keen competition is being manifested to decide the final selections for the various positions. The prospects are for a promising future for an excellent team.

Young Ray Gomez, a hurler of a great deal of promise, provided the feature of the game by going into the game as a relief pitcher, and allowing but three hits and striking out nine batters in six and two-thirds innings. Ray also collected two hits, as did Catcher Jimmy O'Shea, who also caught a sparkling game and threw out several runners.

All the team needs now is a bit of a following by its supporters and it then promises to be one of the best known and hardest clubs to beat in the bay area. It is really a colorful, hustling ball club to see in action.

The time and place of the games to be played by this team will be shown on the screen at the theater every Friday night and the results of the games will be shown Sunday night.

Attempted Practical Joke Not So Funny

Al Malfatti of Parkview avenue on Monday evening informed his wife he had just swallowed a draught of lysol, following a family quarrel at their home.

Mrs. Malfatti called the local police department and informed them her husband had drunk poison.

Officer Sunderland, on his arrival at the home with the ambulance, was told that Malfatti was only joking, and the latter seemed very much amused at his hoax.

The officer, however, failed to see the point of the joke and rushed the patient to the ambulance and thence to the Villa Sanitarium. The doctors at that institution also possess very little sense of humor and could comprehend nothing funny about a fake suicide attempt.

Investigation revealed that Malfatti had swallowed none of the poisonous fluid. A double dose of salts was administered to the patient and this helped to convince him that doctors and police do not appreciate practical jokes.

MODERN TRANPORTATION IS BIG BOON TO BUSINESS

By J. W. MARCHBANK
(Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work)

Sourdoughs have a hankering to go "outside" just as people go to Alaska whenever the opportunity presents itself. The northern country is very much in the public eye at present on account of the recrudescence in mining and I see great things ahead. Interest in pioneering and pioneers is at its height.

Changes in the methods of transportation have helped materially in revival. As was said by Allen X. Grant, editor of the Kusko Times, in an interview ,the other day, it took more than a month in olden times to make the journey from Anchorage to the Kuskokwim region. Now it's a matter of two hours and forty minutes by airplane.

As Grant said:

"Alaska isn't the dogteam country it used to be."

We learn from the Alaska Weekly that Grant went to Dawson in the stampede to the Klondyke in 1898, and was in that camp for several years. He has been a thorough going Northerner for thirty-six years. In that time he was outside on one visit, when he visited the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in San Francisco.

As to conditions in Alaska, he said: "Mining is on the upgrade in Alaska, especially in the Kuskokwim section, where the high price of gold has put four new dredges to work."

The automobile is quite a factor in making mining properties easy to reach, as well as the airplane. The situation in British Columbia was graphically put recently in the columns of the Vancouver Sun, where we read;

"When one thinks of visiting gold mines the thought is usually associated with rough mountainous country inaccessible to transportation, or at least difficult mountain climbing, hardships—nature in the raw.

"But when the party of business men, newspaper men, and directors of the company last weekend drove their cars within forty feet of the shaft of the Sheffield Gold and Silver Mines, now being developed in the Merritt district, they had an unexpected experience.

"Located a few miles from the town of Merritt, apparently on a similar mineralized structure to the Vidette and Nicola producing mines which lie to the north, the visitors were given an opportunity to inspect a property developed far beyond the usual prospect stage."

A late book on monetary topics that is causing some discussion is James P. Warburg's "The Money Muddle." Warburg was financial advisor to the American delegation at the London conference last year. The problem of the proper currency for the country is treated in a decidedly vigorous manner, as has been pointed out by a number of critics.

Elementary facts and principles of money and banking are set forth in the early chapters of the book. Later the well kiown expert tells of things to be done in order to bring order out the present banking chaos.

Warburg is of the opinion there should be an international understanding, establishing a gold bullion standard. The bullion idea is in substantial agreement with Frank Vanderlip and others who have made a deep study of the disjointed conditions of the last few years in monetary matters.

Chief among the recommendations on banking is raising the minimum capital requirement for a bank "from the present ridiculous figure of $50,000 to, let us say, $500,000."

All in all, it is a thought provoking book.

COUNCIL SESSION HELD MONDAY

After Transacting Business Meeting Adjourned to Friday Evening

The city council convened in regular session at the city hall, Monday evening, with all councilmen answering the roll call.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Bids were opened and read with reference to public liability insurance. Action on the matter was postponed, on motion, until the adjourned meeting, this evening, so that additional details may be secured with regard to extension of the coverage to supervision of playgrounds and with regard to use of school grounds by the city during the vecation periods and on Saturdays and holidays.

After reading of a petition from the Daly City Merchants Association, the council adopted a resolution favoring the use of San Mateo County products for local city operations.

C. E. Piatt was awarded the contract for the audit of the city's books for the fiscal year 1933-34, he having submitted the lowest bid for this work.

The city clerk was instructed to communicate with the Board of Fire Underwriters, informing that body it was the belief of the members of the council that the new hydrants which have been installed in Colma entitled business houses served thereby to an immediate adjustment of insurance rates in that section. The underwriters, in a communication, had asked that the survey for such adjustment be held in abeyance until the city's new reservoir had been completed.

The Merchants Association of Daly City, through its secretary, submitted a petition requesting passage of an ordinance prohibiting promiscuous distribution of handbills and similar advertising matter. Action was deferred until the next meeting, at which time a committee of the association will be requested to attend and fully explain the matter.

A request from S. Watts for the renumbering of residences on that portion of Templeton avenue which has recently been renamed be completed at once. The city clerk was instructed to comply with the request.

A spokesman for residents on Vista Grande avenue asked that the trucks now being used on the highway wid-

NEWS OF JUNIOR GIRL RESERVES

Party Given in Honor of Advisor and Leader in Movement

The Junior Girl Reserves held a "Mickey Mouse" party on Friday evening of last week. The guest of honor was Miss Susabelle Dorsay, an advisor and leader of the Girl Reserves.

The table was covered with a "Mickey Mouse" luncheon cloth, with fancy plates and napkins to match the spread. At each place stood guard a large china "Mickey Mouse" or a "Minnie Mouse" as a party favor. In the center of the table was a handsome glass bowl of red flowers and on either side were placed bright red candles.

Appetizing refreshments were partaken of by the guests. The party was one that will long be remembered as one of the nicest parties we have ever had the pleasure of attending.

Our advisor, Mrs. Orr, escorted a large group of girls to the Y. W. C. A. on Wednesday for an all day meeting of the Girl Reserves from all over the city.

The girls divide into groups and choose their group. There is a dramatic group, cooking class, craft work, tap class and gym class.

The girls took their lunch and ate it at the park. located about three blocks from the "Y."

In the afternoon, they visited the Samarkand Ice Cream Company's plant, the inspection of which proved very instructive and enjoyable.

The next affair will be held next Tuesday, as Wednesday falls on the Independence Day, at which time the girls will go to the beach to spend the day.

These all day trips give our girls opportunity to become acquainted with other Girl Reserve members.

Make a note of the day and save your Wednesdays for the remainder of the summer.

SUPERVISORS OF COUNTY HAVE BUSY MEETING

Large Volume of Business Transacted and Matters of Great Importance Are Discussed

Action to secure a $116,891 loan from state and federal authorities for unemployment relief was taken by the San Mateo county board of supervisors at Monday's meeting in Redwood City.

Application for the loan, to be repaid in ten installments beginning in 1937 was approved at the recommendation of the county unemployment relief committee.

A letter from the improvement club asked an explanation of "proposed drastic changes in the relief committee's personnel." The letter was the result of a recent change at Daly City in which an outside social service worker with college training was brought in to replace the original worker there who had come under the scrutiny of a supervisorial investigation.

During the discussion of relief work, George E. Dunn, Half Moon Bay publisher, asked the supervisors to include the Purisima, Memorial park and Fozas roads in the highway program. He was informed that the board plans to include these districts.

The board referred the request of Fred. A. Watkins, representing the Purity Food Stores, for removal of restrictions providing for use of county warrants for food orders at independent stores only, to the district attorney.

An ordinance, permitting the county to charge a slight fee for camping privileges in county recreational centers was approved by the board.

Action on the proposed increase in allocation of state gasoline tax funds to various cities of the county was laid over for another week.

The board adjourned to meet with County Engineer James for a discussion of the revised road budget. James asked an appropriation for a steam shovel. He said the budget, as it now stands, totals $285,000, which is $55,000 more than the amount decided upon, and some projects must be eliminated.

DON'T YOU THINK SO?

J. W. Marchbank says: The best places for our subscribers and families to patronize are those well established home stores that assist in building up our rapidly expanding community. Our merchants are trying to sell at lowest prices consistent with the principles of the N. R. A.

They can afford to do so on account of the low rents they pay. If they buy correctly at wholesale, they can sell at as low prices as anyone.

MINING NOTES

Gossip Pertinent to the Industry Gathered From Here and There

Territorial Representative J. K. Green and his associates in the ownership of the Star group in the Marmot River section will undertake an extensive developement program on that promising gold property as soon as supplies and equipment due to arrive on the next ore boat can be transported to the scene of operation, according to a statement made by Green following his return from a conference with his associates in Seattle, says the Hyder Miner.

This work is to be done entirely at the expense of the owners, who include, in addition to Green, L. Crosby and George Mehlfeld of Seattle and Eli Watland of Stewart.

One of the main objectives of this season's operations will be to take out as large a quantity of ore as can be obtained for smelter tests, to determine as far as possible the actual working values, Green said.

A secondary objective will be to prepare the property for a complete geological and mineralogical examination as a preliminary to future development and the organization of a company to take over and operate the ground.

To facilitate transportation of supplies and ore during the season, a small aerial tramway about 500 feet in length will be installed between the property and the government trail on the Marmot. Cable and other equipment for the tram is now en route north. A scow will also be employed in transporting ore on the river.

Green stated that the project is receiving every assistance from the Premier Gold Mining Co. in the matter of supply transportation from the south and local dockage facilities and the British Columbia government road bureau has consented to an extension of a road to the property.

The Star group is situated between the north and south forks of the Marmot and is one of the largest and most favorably regarded gold properties in the Portland Canal district. The group contains an extensive series of ore showing from which gold values up to three ounces per ton have been obtained in earlier explorations.

The Alaska Weekly says: What may develop into an important strike has been reported by the management of the Cariboo Coronado Gold Mines, Ltd. In driving their main tunnel they encountered a good looking body of quartz at 568 feet from the portal. The new find is well mineralized and while assay results are not yet available, the superintendent feels that he is on the verge of making some important finds.

Installation of equipment for the development work is now practically completed. During the past month some fifteen hundred feet of rails have ben received and a corresponding amount of air pipe. The supplies of food and powder sufficient to last for the next three months are now in ware houses on the property and there is nothing to interfere with driving ahead with the proposed development.

Preliminary work accomplished by a crew directed by Major D. M. Mathieson, the superintendent, and D. A. Gillis, managing director, was inspected.

Dr. Schofield, after the inspection, advised directors that he is submitting a favorable report upon the work, and will outline a program for permanent development.

COMBINED PROMOTION AND INSTALLATION SERVICE

Following the opening song service of the Sunday School, July 1st, at Grace Church of the Nazarene, the annual promotion exercises will take place. Due to the large size of some of the classes, newly formed groups have been planned.

The Sunday School's program has so expended that it has become necessary to put some classes in nearby dwellings. It is anticipated that, as soon as suitable arrangements can be made with the owners of the property, a program of enlarging the present quarters will be undertaken.

A brief but interesting installation service will be conducted by the pastor following the promotion exercises. At this meeting the appointment of teachers for the coming year will be made. Each will receive their commission.

BIRTHDAY PARTY

Betty Lou Stein, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Stein of Woodrow street, was hostess to several of her friends, Thursday of last week, when she entertained them in honor of her fourth birthday.

Betty Lou received many beautiful gifts from her little friends.

The afternoon was delightfully spent in playing games, after which dainty refreshments were served. The table was prettily decorated in pink and blue crepe paper, with little favors to match.

Those attending were Kathleen Dawe, Ruth Butman, Augusta Cattaneo, Dorothy Dawe and Bobbie Burkhart.

VERA PROBST BURIED

The death of Mrs. Vera Probst of 452 San Diego avenue, a student nurse at the San Francisco Hospital, died at that institution, Tuesday, as the result of injuries sustained in an automobile accident two weeks ago.

Deceased is survived by her husband, Arnold R. Probst.

The funeral was conducted from the Lasswell parlors at 2 p. m., Thursday afternoon. Interment was in Olivet Memorial Park.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer, young professor of English literature and rhetoric, meets on the train a young man, Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy, as professor of mathematics and chemistry. They reach the railroad station, and meet Mrs. Denver, engaged as matron of the Academy. At the school the group is struck by an air of mystery pervading the lonely place. Gordon Haskell, the proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne, teacher of psychology, completes the faculty.

"How good it looks," Mrs. Denver said frankly. "This mountain air makes one hungry."

"Are we to wait for Mr.—Haskell?"

"I think we ought to," Mrs. Denver said.

The servitor turned at the door on hearing these words. "Don't wait for him! Don't look for him until you see him."

The quartette laughed a little nervously, and drew up their chairs. Mrs. Denver, at Janet's request, poured the tea, and they all drank it with the slight constraint of people only just beginning to know each other.

"I love the region," Payne remarked. "I think homesickness drew me to this spot; how intensely quiet it is!"

"Intensely quiet. I wonder where the scholars are."

"Of course, they may all be in the class rooms," Arthur ventured. "Or else out at hare-and-hounds—or in the gymnasium."

Mrs. Denver was carefully putting some dropped crumbs on the edge of the tray. "I want to get right into work—see where the linen closets are, and the mending room, and know what servants will be directly under my supervision—there's so much detail in a house as big as this; and I am eager to know his rules and requirements."

"I hope there's a good library," Janet remarked.

"I am going into the hall for a minute," Arthur said, rising, "to look again at those old portraits." He returned in a little while with an air of relief. "Well, I glanced through a glass door and discovered a handful of the scholars bending over their desks; but of all absorbed students, and in such fading light, too! Not one stirred or looked up while I was standing there. Then I examined those great maps in the rear hall. They are dated back in the fifties—queer to keep obsolete maps in a modern academy! The desks were very clumsy looking, too—an ancient type. I should think parents would make a row about such archaic furnishings. I hope the school books are more modern than the maps."

"Queer that one hears no bells," said Mrs. Denver. "I'd feel sort of at home if I heard a bell."

What they did hear was a long, low laugh—like the laughter of a very sophisticated, crafty, but not very friendly person. It was repeated after a moment's interval, then seemed to die away on the staircase. Twilight was setting in, but no one came to light the lamps. At last Haskell appeared, smiling, bending down his handsome, sensitive face to smell his gardenia.

The four rose with alacrity, and he led them down the hall past the glass door. The newcomers glanced through it.

"There are some real students!" Janet remarked. "How intensely absorbed they seem."

Haskell at the head of the little procession turned sharply around, glanced through the door, and for an instant his face became deathly white. But he recovered himself almost at once. "Ah, the lights should be on there. This way, my pedagogues. I ask your admiration of the curve of this staircase; is it not beautiful?"

He went on before them with a light, almost jaunty step. Mrs. Denver sniffed the air suspiciously, thinking she smelled must. "This place needs a thorough overhauling," she thought. "How glad I'll be to get started—to settle down—to know just what I have to do."

"This is your room," Haskell said to Janet, throwing open a door with the number 90 on it. "And yours is just next," addressing Mrs. Denver. "You will find matches on the table. Unfortunately we have to use lamps here. The bathroom is just opposite. Now, Wilton, Fleming."

His voice had suddenly become both harsh and secretive. The two men followed him down the corridor, disappeared around a corner.

Janet put a hand on Mrs. Denver's arm. "I am so glad to be next door to you. It's all so strange."

"You feel strange here, too?"

"Very strange."

"He must be rather stern or those young people wouldn't sit so still."

"They seemed almost like dead people," Janet remarked. "Let us light the lamp."

"I wish there weren't so many pines—it's a gloomy tree," Mrs. Denver commented.

"We'll feel better when we've been introduced to the other teachers and know our duties."

"Are there other teachers?"

Their blank faces confronted each other. "It would be a very small faculty—three people," Janet ventured in a weak voice.

"My dear, you look pale. Sit down a minute. Let's keep quite still and listen—maybe those children, who were straining their eyes, will be rushing out soon."

Janet sat down nervously, telling herself she was very foolish. But she kept silence, her eyes on the bit of black braiding on Mrs. Denver's gown. She thought of Wilton Payne, and was glad Arthur Fleming had a man to companion him as she had a woman. They sat very still. Outside, the wind moaned in the pine trees, and there was a splash of rain against the window. Within the house profound silence reigned.

A heavy knock on the door made them both start. But it was only the man with their baggage. He entered and departed silently.

"Really I don't want to unpack my trunk," Janet remarked. "I wonder if there is hot water in the bathroom?"

She found the bathroom as antiquated as the rest of the house, with a built-in copper tub—a basin highly ornamented with colored flowers and gold scroll-work, with big clumsy taps. But there was hot water.

Curiosity was getting the better of fatigue and fear. She went to the head of the staircase. As she stood there a hand was laid on her shoulder. She started violently, turned and saw Haskell's bright, restless eyes fixed upon her.

As She Stood There a Hand Was Laid on Her Shoulder.

"Don't go down, Miss Mercer," he conmanded.

"The quiet of the house oppresses me."

"I fear you are over-excited, overtired. Go back to your room and rest."

Only too glad to get away from him, she returned to her bedroom. At the door stood Mrs. Denver, who by way of dressing for dinner had assumed a neat lace collar.

"Have you heard anything yet?"

"Not a thing. I was starting to go downstairs when Mr. Haskell met me—and—really—commanded be to go back to my room."

"I've only unpacked a few things—I feel so strange here. I've not even heard a bell, and you always hear bells in schools."

"I suppose he will be sending for us—soon—unless—"

Mrs. Denver's eyes were fixed on hers with apprehension. "Unless what?" she whispered.

"Unless he doesn't want those very quiet students to be disturbed."

"Poor children! I wonder if Mr. Payne's and Mr. Fleming's rooms are near us? Somehow I'd feel safer if they were in call."

"Why, we act as if this wasn't a big house full of people. Listen, the wind is rising again. There must be heavy draughts. See the lamp flicker!"

Another knock on the door. This time it was the stolid maidservant.

"Dinner's ready," she announced.

Janet put out her lamp. Instead of turning toward the stairs, the young woman led them down the corridor; ahead of them they saw an oblong of light cutting the dark hall from an open door.

Arthur and Wilton Payne were standing just inside this door, looking with an air of bewilderment at a table set for four which occupied the center of what seemed to be an upstairs sitting room.

"Sit down and I'll bring the soup," the servant said.

They looked at each other, then silently took their places. When Arthur was sure that the waitress was out of hearing, he leaned across the table and spoke to Janet.

"Mr. Payne and I haven't seen one scholar yet—barring those in the classroom."

Their dinner was excellent—plain food, but well cooked. At the salad course, Haskell suddenly appeared in the doorway.

"Everything right?" he asked cheerfully. "I believe that a good table in a school is more than half the education."

"Where is the general dining room?" Mrs. Denver inquired boldly.

"Downstairs in the west wing."

"Your pupils are certainly well trained," Arthur remarked. "Are you always so intensely quiet here?"

Haskell twisted a seal ring on his finger. "Mr. Payne, what are the psychological bases of fear?"

New Hair Fashions Are Versatile

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

MOST women realize or are coming to realize that as far as capitalizing personal charm and achieving a smart and distinctive appearance are concerned, there is nothing which so effectively does just that as perfect grooming. Not even a wardrobe of beautiful clothes can do for one that which a becomingly coiffed head, a cunningly arched eyebrow and a youth-giving facial can do.

In lieu of which, small wonder is it that the matter of placing one's destiny in tne hands of one's favorite beautician is growing to be a fixed habit with the fair sex rather than an occasional luxury.

And so, Madam and Miss Vacationist, how about it, are you making it a matter of first importance to see to it that your hair is set in order ere you depart for seashore, or mountainside? Now that the newest method is to do it the machineless way—no wires attached—no electricity, the acquiring of a "permanent" becomes more of a pastime than a trying, tedious ordeal.

By the way, it is well to keep in mind in regard to the latest hairdress that the distinguishing feature of the smartest coiffures is hair that is partly curly and partly straight. Which means that for the first time in years the girl with straight hair has a real advantage, for she can get a permanent wave and have the waves placed where she wants them instead of having them all over her head. The girlish hairdress at the top of the group illustrates the idea. Here the hair is brushed back sleek and waveless from the forehead with curls and waves developing at the back and each side. That pretty fashion of wearing flowers in the hair has been revived. In this instance a semi-wreathlet of posies adds infinite charm.

The winsome maiden wearing the fluffy-ruffle net collar, posed below in the picture, also has a part-straight and a part-curly hairdress, and there is a suspicion of bangs surmounting her lovely brow—an adorable coiffure for youth.

Yes, we agree with you, the hair arrangement to the left in the picture is extreme and will probably interest only the type who are seekers after something "different." We appreciate the fact that it would take some time for the conservative average woman to adjust to such a radical change from prevailing fashions as this. However, it does carry the message that the newest trend is to bring curls up higher on the head off the nape of the neck, not necessarily as high as pictured, but striking a happy medium. Here you see also the coronet braid which if you haven't one grown to your head, need worry you not at all, for you can buy 'em looking as natural as your very own. And beau-catchers, that's what our grandmammas used to call them in the days of their youth, if we are not mistaken—referring to those little curly-kews over the temple and forehead.

A more conservative hairdress is presented to the left in the group. It is just such as ladies of refinement and cultured taste will covet. Not a hair is seen out of place, which is exactly what fashion demands of the new coiffures, an exquisite finesse which stands for expert grooming.

Since it is again the fashion to wear ribbons and bandeaux, we thought you might like to see the attractive way the idea has been carried out in the instance of a young modern, so we are adding it (in the circle) as a postscript. The bandeau is formed of velvet leaves which crown her pretty waves and curls in classic simplicity.

SUMMER CLOTHES REALLY FEMININE

Clothes have become so profoundly feminine that happily one no longer feels obliged to babble about their femininity.

They are obviously created for women, not for tomboys, or baby dolls. This midseason shows the mode ascending toward a perfection of balance that has not been achieved in a long time. Exaggerated wind-blown effects have been swept away, leaving pleasant ghosts of their former selves to lend movement to the silhouette. The bust is now the most important point—yes, one can say it, the high spot—of the silhouette. Every couturier emphasizes it in some way, at least on frocks and blouses. All the other moot style boundaries fade into insignificance beside it.

Black Complex Features Midsummer Collections

Lovely, wearable, feminine clothes distinguished the Paris midseason collections. Freaks and oddities were conspicuous by their absence; no bustles, no panniers, no fish-fins, nothing zoological. They follow, in the main, the natural lines of the body, and their aim is to make women attractive.

Two leading points stood out. First, the black complex. Secondly, the persistence of the three-quarter coat.

Many collections are so black, that you might think a gigantic inkwell had been spilled over them. Black for morning, black for afternoon, black for evening. Sometimes, for evenings, very exciting fabrics make the black gowns unusual. Cellophanes, and cires, and curious crinkles and clokies.

With her blacks, whites, and unusual grays, and her fabrics suggesting widow's weeds, Schiaparelli seemed to be celebrating the funeral of the depression.

NAVY SHEER SUIT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

This smart new and very wearable swagger suit in a heavy sheer of bemberg has a dashing windswept collar of white pique. A suit of this description is an asset to any and every summer wardrobe. Its three-quarter coat will pose stunningly over any one of your daytime prints and it looks ever so voguish worn with your white and pastel colored piques and linens. Every woman will at once see the possibilities in this suit.

AVERSION

By R. H. WILKINSON

©, Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

EVER since the day Adrian Lytton donned his first pair of long trousers he had been bothered by a strong dislike for little men.

And with the passing of the years this attitude toward males of petite stature grew and became almost an obsession.

It was annoying, especially because Adrian couldn't tell why little men aroused in him a feeling of animosity.

There just wasn't a logical explanation for the thing.

It was there, inside of him, a feeling that stirred to life whenever he came in contact with or for long was forced to gaze upon a little man.

Not that Adrian was mighty.

True, at the age of twenty-seven, he stood six feet one and a half inches (without stockings), and his physique was nicely proportioned.

But he wasn't one of those big, strong, brawny brutes, who naturally regard persons of small stature with an expression of superiority.

He wasn't that sort of person.

He just didn't like little men, and that's all there was to it.

This peculiar element in Adrian's makeup was asserting itself at the present moment.

He was sitting in a wicker chair placed in a tiny alcove in the auditorium of the Alpine club.

The auditorium itself, serving as a dance floor, was dimly lighted.

A hundred or more couples moved about, shuffling and scraping and jostling one another and attempting, each in their individual and original manner, to keep in time with a sobbing orchestra.

Adrian's features registered dismal gloom; an expression wholly lost upon those who chanced to look in his direction by virtue of a freakish mask, which, in contrast to its wearer's state of mind, created an illusion of silly merriment.

The event was a masquerade ball, the third annual, sponsored by the Alpine club, and the creations in costume and mask worn by participants were something to raise the flag about.

Adrian's glumness, which for the last five minutes had been developing into a burning rage, had been provoked by a youth scarcely more than five feet two or three inches tall, who, during the course of a single dance, had crossed Adrian's path twice, jostled him three times and glared at him once from behind a hideous Chinese mask, because of an unexpected collision.

There was something about the manner of this especially small youth that served to whet Adrian's already established dislike for little men.

Somehow mere sight of the youth, coupled with memory of that ugly glare which seemed to contain a condemning look, provoked a new feeling of resentment and animosity.

He was possessed, wholly without warning, with an impulsive desire to slap the little runt down.

In fact, he actually believed that slapping the little runt down would provide him with no end of satisfaction and probably bring to a conclusion this strange aversion for little men.

But because slapping runts down wasn't being done, especially at the Alpine club's costume ball, and because Adrian couldn't find any explanation for his sudden impulse (a fact which annoyed him considerably), he hied himself to this remote alcove to cool off and think the thing over.

But even as he sat there in sober contemplation, the object of his annoyance came dancing past and tripped over his outstretched foot.

There was a breathless moment while the eyes behind the hideous Chinese mask glared at him in silent threat; while Adrian fought mightily in an effort to restrain himself from leaping at the throat of the little man.

But the moment passed.

The Chinese mask danced away, and the space was filled with other dancers en route around the floor.

Adrian sat back, breathing laboriously. And suddenly he knew that he must get out of there.

He knew that if he came in contact once more with that particular little man, something was going to happen.

And so, lest this possibility should actually occur, he shoved and pushed his way to the door, through the stag line, and out on to the clubhouse veranda.

He located an isolated spot and sat down to smoke a cigarette and stare at the moon and curse himself for this affliction that tormented his soul without explanation.

And despite his best efforts he couldn't rid his mind of the idea that to slap down the little runt with the Chinese mask would cure him once and for all of his obsession.

He remembered that the little man had worn a gay Chinese costume, which could easily be distinguished after the masks had been removed during intermission.

And with a curious sense of shock he wondered if the wearer of the mask were some one of his acquaintances.

What if he turned out to be Eddie Drake or Paul Forbes, both little men, both sons of close friends of the family?

That would be bad.

No, it would never do to slap down Paul or Eddie.

Inside the clubhouse the music had stopped and the orchestra leader was bawling something through a megaphone. Adrian distinguished the word "intermission," and tore off his mask.

He sat for a long time wondering whether or not he should go back, hardly daring to trust himself for fear of what he might do should he come face to face with the little man who had trod on his toes.

Presently, however, he stood up and threw away his cigarette.

It was all foolishness, this obsession of his.

It was the result of brooding.

There wasn't any excuse for a man of his intelligence to let a thing like that get the best of him.

He was going back in there, seek out the Chinese-costumed runt and shake his hand and tell him what a swell guy he was.

Hereafter, he was going to force himself to like little men.

En route back to the clubhouse door Adrian remembered that Tom Harrison, who was six feet one inch tall and whom Adrian liked, was dragging an out of town girl to tonight's ball.

Two days previous Tom had said: "Adrian, I want you to meet Bettina. She's a fine girl. You'll like her. After we unmask, you look us up and I'll give you a break."

Adrian remembered these words now and told himself that as soon as he had located the little runt he'd look up Tom and the girl.

But as the thing turned out he found Tom and the girl first.

They were standing just inside the clubhouse door, and when Adrian looked into the girl's eyes, he suddenly felt weak and peculiar inside.

She was much more than an ordinary girl. In fact, she was exactly the type of girl that Adrian had dreamed of meeting all his life. He was sure of that, even before he spoke to her.

Tom espied him and beckoned and took the girl by the arm and led her toward him.

And in that moment Adrian knew a warm feeling of comradeship toward Tom.

A man in a million. Good old Tom—

Adrian had just opened his mouth to speak when suddenly he was seized from behind.

He whirled around to stare down into a strange face, a dark-complexioned, anger-filled face; a face that fairly writhed with pent up fury.

And before Adrian had time to gather in what it was all about he was struck forcibly on the chin.

He rebounded and—collided with the wall.

Fierce anger welled up inside of Adrian, anger augmented by humiliation.

For the man who had struck him was the little runt of the Chinese costume, and the girl, the girl who was everything that Adrian had ever dreamed about, was standing there laughing because it must have struck her as funny to see the little runt slap big six-foot two Adrian against the wall.

Well, it had come.

This was the supreme moment, the moment when Adrian could punch a little man in the nose and feel justified.

He came away from the wall and struck out blindly; struck empty air.

Something hard smacked against his chin.

He rebounded again, blinked.

The little runt was standing close.

"I hate big guys," he was saying. "Hate 'em. They give me a pain. Especially big guys like you who toss us little fellows around and act so superior about it. I've been wanting to do this for a long time."

It can't be said that Adrian didn't try to defend himself. But all his efforts seemed useless.

The little runt in the Chinese costume was lightning. One, two, three, Adrian's face was a punching bag. One-two. Blood spurted from his nose. Men shouted. Women screamed.

And then suddenly it was over. Adrian lay on the floor, a bruised and bloody mess.

He was only partly conscious, but conscious enough to realize what had happened, conscious enough to see the girl, the girl he'd dreamed about, laughing as if she'd burst a blood vessel.

Adrian didn't try to get up.

He lay there for a long time thinking.

"I hate big guys." He could hear the words again. And suddenly he grinned.

He was glad it had happened, glad the girl was there to laugh.

Glad because he no longer possessed the desire to slap down little men, no longer disliked them.

He was cured of his obsession.

He knew that little men bothered him because of their apparent physical inferiority, and that little men had been bothered by him because of this apparent physical superiority—a theory which had just now been proven all cockeyed.

"Eat" and "Et"

In the United States, the past tense of the verb to eat is rarely heard other than ate, pronounced to rhyme with late, gate, mate, says Literary Digest. In England the past tense appears indiscriminately as ate or eat, and in either spelling it is generally pronounced to rhyme with let, get, met. Occasionally, the form ate is pronounced in England as in the United States, and occasionally the form eat appears in the United States with the pronunciation of

Fans Realize Racing Must Be Run Solely As Sport

By J. W. MARCHBANK

Promoters have no place in the economy of the racing pastime and California should be among the states giving no harbor to the men who try to make a business out of what is a sport in all its essentials. Emphasis has been placed on the sportsmanlike attitude necessary for the upbuilding of the thoroughbred game, and correctly so. Without the "new deal" angle our race tracks will amount to little in the years to come.

Sensing the danger of undesirable elements getting control of racing and recognizing that an early start in the right direction would be an immense help, I have been advocating a move that will bring utter confusion into the ranks of the promoters and send them on their way to other fields. If the likely return on the investment is not inviting the promoters will throw up their hands, with a consequent benefit to the wellbeing of the popular game.

At present the commission on the pari-mutuel pools, the principal source of income for a racing association, is 12 per cent. Of course, not all of the "take" goes to the race track. The state of California derives an altogether too high percentage from the betting pools, getting 4 per cent, leaving 8 per cent for the racing concern.

Racing is a good way of bringing well to do people to our borders, and inside those same borders things must be made as attractive as possible. For example, down in Florida the "take" is 10 per cent; quite a bit different from our twelve. Tourists figure those things more than is generally supposed, too.

Why not go to 9 per cent in the take out, thus getting 1 per cent below that of our most formidable rival?

With the election not far distant, it behooves all sportsmen to do all they can in the way of sending legislators to Sacramento who will battle in January for a reduction from 12 to 9 per cent in the "take."

The man who boasts of running things at home may be referring to the furnace in winter and the lawn mower in summer.

In the old days a girl married for a home—and stayed there.

THE DEMAGOGUES

Although this is an "off year" in politics, so-called because there is no national campaign for president and vice president, there will be plenty of interest in contests for state offices and for membership in both houses of Congress. All members of the House and one-third of the Senate will be chosen in elections this year.

Politicians of every sort will make their appeal to the "dear people" for support on one pretext or another. And, as always, the demagogues will be out in full force.

Webster defines a demagogue as "one who plays an insincere role in public life for the sake of gaining influence or office; a poser in politics, especially one who panders to popular prejudice or seeks to inflame reasonless passions in the advancement of his personal interests."

It is a reflection upon the intelligence and judgment of a great percentage of voters that they are apparently unable to size up the demagogue for what he is. They listen to his ravings and swallow his insincere promises with avidity. His wildest statements and most irresponsible representations are often accepted at face value—and he gets many votes from the less intelligent class of citizens.

THE PASSION PLAY

Many thousands of tourists will flock to Oberammergau, Germany, this summer to witness the world-famous Passion Play, which has been performed in that humble mountain village at intervals for 300 years. This year's season began on May 21 and the last performance will be on September 23.

According to tradition, when the town was menaced by the plague in 1634, the village made a vow to give a play every ten years depicting scenes pertaining to the life and death of Christ if they were spared. Believing that they were saved from the plague through divine intervention, the vow has been kept throughout the succeeding three centuries.

Usually, the Passion Play is presented on years whose number is divisible by ten—1900, 1910, 1920, 1930, and so on—but an exception is made this year in order to commemorate the three hundredth anniversary of the villagers' vow.

Each performance is given in daytime, from 8 in the morning until 6 in the afternoon, with an intermission of two hours at noon. This year twenty-eight performances will be given.

Considerable interest on the part of Americans is manifested in the person of Fraulein Klara Mayr, who plays the role of Mary Magdalene this year, because she has lived in the United States and expects to marry and make her permanent home in Washington this fall, after the close of the Passion Play season.

Through its Passion Play the little town of Oberammergau, with a normal population of little more than 2000, has become known through the entire civilized world.

Federal Emergency Relief Administration

Permanent reduction in the number of families receiving relief is one of the results anticipated from the rural work centers now being developed. The plan for the work centers has been worked out in Texas, according to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, and the Agricultural Extension Service of Texas has issued a description of project which the FERA has called to the attention of other states as a possible solution to some of the country's relief problems.

center is desired must first show that not less than ten families from relief rolls will be materially aided by the project. Part or all of these families may already be living in the community. It is also suggested that that families that have moved from this community to the city, and have been put on the city relief rolls, be brought back upon application of their former neighbors, and placed in houses made habitable with aid of relief funds. The work center would then afford means of setting up small manufacturing activities, for products to be exchanged or sold locally. This would supplement food and other items which families are expected to produce on the small farms where they are being located.

"Relocating these families is by infiltration, and they must be acceptable wherever they go," says the plan.

The community must first show that it can furnish suitable vacant houses to be made habitable by labor of the occupants in return for rent-free privileges. Relief funds may also be used for labor and a limited amount of material for new houses.

Several acres must be donated by the community for site of the work center, title to be held by the community, or preferably, by a co-operative group. The community is expected to supply half of the material for construction, and half of the equipment, while labor is supplied by the relief administration.

Products of the community house might include mattresses, harness, chaps, quilts, canned goods, cured meats and dozens of other commodities needed in the neighborhood. In addition, repairs and parts could b made there for furniture, farm machinery, and outbuildings.

It is suggested that the work center be used for recreation also, and that the equipment be such as could be converted and shifted easily from utilitarian to recreational purposes. For instance, work tables are suggested with hinged tops, so that they could be convertible into seats.

This community house would be the "visible symbol of the new deal. It merges the possibilities of the already large movement toward the small farm with home manufacture, thereby stimulating a significant trend in rural life."

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics recently surveyed 123 factories in fifteen eastern, southern and central states, and found that factories in fifteen Eastern, Southern, and Central States, and found that tories in small towns or in the open country are enabling many farm people who live within convenient distances of such establishments, to derive from them five different kinds of income: By selling some of their farm products to the factories; by performing certain steps in the manufacturing processes in their own homes or in small farm shops; by having a claim upon some of the profits of the business through investments in the factory; and by selling foodstuffs and possibly other farm products on local markets that have been expanded because of the presence of the factory.

A new method of preventing ice on the highways is being tried out in Germany. About 700 grams of cattle salt is added to the material for each square meter of surfacing. Ice formed on such surfaces is said to be loose and easily removed.

PROFESSOR RICHARDSON MADE DEAN OF U. C. SUMMER SESSION

Announcement was made Tuesday by President Robert Gordon Sproul of the appointment of Professor Leon J. Richardson as dean of the 1934 Summer Session of the University of California. The vacancy occurred following the death this spring of Dr. Harold L. Bruce.

Professor Richardson has already entered upon his duties and will have charge of all administrative matters connected with the summer work of the University at Berkeley. He has served in the same capacity previously, being dean of the Summer Session in 1902, 103 and 1904, and was acting dean in 1905 and 1913.

Professor Richardson has not severed his connection with the University Extension Division, of which he is director.

HUMAN BUFFER IS SAVED IN FALL

Hard heads run in the Don Parker family, San Mateo health authorities said recently.

Parker, 31, of 21 Mateo avenue, Millbrae, working on a SERA project in Burlingame Monday, was hit on the head with a shovel in the hands of Charles Walser, 74, of San Mateo. Walser, working on top of the ditch, slipped and fell, landing, shovel and all, on Parker, eight feet below.

Parker has returned to work.

Two months ago, his son, Don Parker Jr., 2 years old, fell out of a second story window, shattering a flower pot and damaging a cement sidewalk.

Young Parker was not injured. He landed on his head.

BETTER STEERING

Advent of individually suspended front wheels has caused advocates of both types of front wheel suspension to become "steering conscious," according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association. Drivers are realizing that in order to enjoy the benefits of better riding and easier steering more attention must be paid to tire pressure, wheel balance and alignment. If any one of these items is incorrect, proper performance cannot be expected.

GETS OUT OF JAIL, SOON BACK AGAIN

Sixty days in jail didn't mean a thing to Geraldine Frazier, colored, 35-year-old housekeeper at 1307 Hancock street, Redwood City.

Released the other day from San Mateo County Jail after a term for disturbing the peace, Miss Frazier located an extra heavy milk bottle and headed for home. Unfortunately, Henry S. Smith, 40, was there when she arrived.

Smith and Miss Frazier don't get along, it seems, for almost immediately she hit him over the head with the bottle, police reported.

As the police bell rang, results were:

Smith was in the hospital being treated for a badly cut head; Miss Frazier was back in her cell on charges of assault with a deadly weapon.

CONCERTS AT WOODLAND THEATER TO START SUNDAY

"Music Midst the Trees" of the Woodland Theater will start again next Sunday afternoon. Unique in character, acoustics and the setting which Nature has provided, the Woodland Theater has found a growing importance in each year of its summer concerts.

The season promises to start with the same social brilliance which it has attained during recent notable years. There should be a record breaking attendance, judging from advance subscription sale.

The occasion of the opening will mark the debut before a Peninsula audience of Fritz Reiner, famous Hungarian baritone.

Mr. Reiner wlil have the able support of the entire personnel of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra.

USE GEAR ON GRADES

Motorists should shift to lower gears and use in compression of the motor for braking purposes when decending long grades, according to the emergency road service of the California Automobile Association. While most brakes will hold the car back without the aid of compression, the continued friction produces excessive heat in the brakes. Brake drums can dissipate only a reasonable amount of heat, and when their limit is reached damage occurs not only to the drums, but also to the brake linings.

THE MAN WHO TRIES

"It is not the critic who counts; not the man who points out how the strong man stumbled or where the doer of deeds could have done them better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena; whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly; who errs and comes short again and again, because there is no effort without error or shortcoming; who does actually try to do the deed; who knows the great enthusiasm, the great devotion, spends himself in a worthy cause; who at the best knows in the end the triumph of high achievement, and who at the worst if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat."

—President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

N. R. A. as the Instrument of Justice

Justice—social and commercial justice—is what the N. R. A codes of fair competition seek to establish as the rule governing all business dealings in America. Examination of the more than 400 codes, under which 96 per cent of the nation's industry is now operating, discloses what tremendous strides have already been taken toward abolition of old abuses and injustices.

To gauge that progress accurately, it is only necessary to take a cursory glance at some of the code provisions designed to build a firm foundation of justice beneath industry in this country:

Defamation — No member of the trade, or industry, shall defame a competitor by falsely imputing to him dishonorable conduct, inability to perform contracts, questionable credit standing, or by other false representation, or by falsely disparaging the grade or quality of his goods—Appears in hundreds of codes.

Secret Rebates—No member of the trade, or industry, shall secretly offer to make any payment or allowance of a rebate, refund, commission credit, unearned discount or excess allowance, whether in the form of money or otherwise, nor shall he secretly offer or extend to any customer any special service or priviledge not extended to all customers of the same class, for the purpose of influencing a sale—Appears in hundreds of codes.

Bribing Employers—No member of the industry shall give, permit to be given, or offer to give anything of value for the purpose of influencing or rewarding the action of any employe, agent or representative of another in relation to the business of the employer of such employe, the principal of such agent or the represented party, without the knowledge of such employer, principal or party. This provision shall not be construed to prohibit free and general distribution of articles commonly used for advertising except so far as such articles are actually used for commercial bribery as hereinabove defined—Appears in hundreds of codes.

Inducing Breach of Existing Contracts—No member of the industry shall willfully induce or attempt to induce the breach of existing contracts between competitors and their customers by any false or deceptive means, or interfere with or obstruct the performance of any contractual duties or services by any such means, with the purpose and effect of hampering, injuring or embarrassing competitors in their business—Appears in hundreds of codes.

Bribing Employers—No member of the industry shall give, permit to be given, or offer to give anything of value for the purpose of influencing or rewarding the action of any employe, agent or representative of another in relation to the business of the employer of such employe, the principal of such agent or the represented party, without the knowledge of such employer, principal or party. This provision shall not be construed to prohibit free and general distribution of articles commonly used for advertising except so far as such articles are actually used for commercial bribery as hereinabove defined—Appears in hundreds of codes.

The average layman, reading these code provisions, may exclaim:

"But, surely, there must already be laws providing punishment for such turpitude!"

In most instances there are such laws, it is true. But to obtain fair verdicts under them in civil or criminal courts is difficult, slow and costly. By incorporating them in codes quick and certain redress is afforded to the victims of unfair practices. And, more important still, the machinery for punishment is placed in the hands of the industry itself in keeping with N. R. A's policy of establishing self-government for the business community.

The codes of fair competition thus work for commercial justice by giving industry its own police facilities and its own "courts." More than that, they place in the hands of the honest majority the weapons with which to defend themselves from the crooked minority who are unwilling to play the game of business fairly.

N. R. A. Highlights of the Week

Are These Women Overpaid? N. R. A. denied permission to a South Carolina firm to pay lower wages than those provided by the code for the used textile bag industry. The code provides a minimum of $9 a week for women, and $11 for men. The company claims that for 53 years it has been paying women $4.40 a week, adding that women of this class usually worked in their homes and averaged from $3 to $4 a week for 68 hours of work,

Workers Protected: By an executive order, President Roosevelt has told employers that they are liable to fine or imprisonment if they demote or dismiss any employe for making complaint or giving evidence of code violation.

Blue Eagle Distribution: Code authorities are now distributing the Blue Eagle. Business houses may apply directly to them for the eagle, which now symbolizes operation under and compliance with a code.

Label Campaign Progressing: The club-women of the country are waging a successful, coast-to-coast campaign against sweatshop conditions, by urging consumers to buy only garments which show N. R. A. labels. George W. Alger, director of the coat and suit code authority, reports that unlabeled merchandise is being returned to manufacturers by stores unable to sell it.

From Red to Black, First Quarter, 1934: Profits of $98,000,000 reported by 210 industrial corporations which totalled a loss of $23,000,000 in same period last year. (National City Bank May Letter). Profit of $27,151,396 shown by 64 miscellaneous companies which lost $29,500,000 in first quarter of 1933. These firms cover a wide range—cash registers, oils, automobiles, motion pictures, radio, merchandising and mining, among others. (Compiled from A. P., Wall street Journal, Analyst and others).

Back to School Movement Progrss-ing: With the coming of a shorter work-week under the codes, the adult education movement has been greatly stimulated, acording to Hilda W. Smith, specialist in workers' education, F. R. A.

From the Mail Bag: A glass worker from West Virginia writes: "Instead of twelve long weary hours that used to be a day's work, I am now working six. Best of all, I know some other poor devil is working those other six hours. Please let me say that I am working for a company that seems to spend a lot of time, effort and money, in living up to the letter and intent of N. R. A."

A "Little Fellow" from Chicago Writes: "We just want to add our compliments to the thousands that you have undoubtedly received with reference to the good N. R. A. is doing industry. In our own little company, N. R. A. has really worked miracles and we are very grateful to you for the benefits we are deriving. Not only were we able to put on additional help but we are able to pay them a white man's salary."

GUILD PRESIDENT IS COMING WEST

Chapters of News Writers' Being Formed in Bay Area

Heywood Broun, noted newspaperman and president of the American Newspaper Guild, is due in San Francisco shortly and members of the bay chapters of the guild expect enthusiasm in the movement to reach the boiling point at that time. San San Francisco is one of the most active centers of guildom.

America's gentlemen of the press have suddenly acquired a belated case of split vision. Where once both eyes were cocked on the romance of journalism and the fact that "one meets such interesting people," the boys of the press are now shifting their binoculars to the more practical side of the so-called profession.

It all came about after the American Newspaper Publishers Association submitted its idea of a code to the N. R. A. The code classified all editorial employes; that is, reporters, re-write men and the like who receive at least thirty-five dollars per week stipend, as "executives." It fixed no restrictions on the number of hours an "executive" should work. And it provided no salary standard.

The answer of the gentlemen of the press was the formation of the American Newspaper Guild.

Members of the guild report surprising progress of the newspapermen's collective bargaining agency since its inception less than a year ago.

As the "Record" stated last week, in publishing an interview with William Randolph Hearst on the guild, the organization now numbers more than 1,000 members. It is largely recruited from the ranks of expert news writers in the metropolitan centers—New York, Chicago, New Orleans, San Francisco, Pittsburgh and elsewhere.

Heywood Broun, the president of the association, is a well known columnist of the Scripps-Howard chain of newspapers.

In San Francisco chapters have been formed on the Examiner, which has a membership of over sixty, or over 75 per cent of its editorial force; the News, which is practically 100 per cent; the Call-Bulletin, with forty-seven members; and the Oakland Post-Enquirer, with almost the entire staff as its membership.

Forming of chapters on the San Francisco Chronicle and the Oakland Tribune is in rapid process at present, according to latest reports from guild headquarters.

Arthur Caylor, conductor of the column, "The Whirligig Behind the News," appearing daily in the San Francisco News, is president of the Bay Area Guild.

A topnotch newspaper man and widely respected by gentlemen of the press in this area for his leadership, Caylor has done much to enhance the prestige of the guild around San Francisco.

The newspaper guild has a big fight ahead.

As yet the Scripps-Howard chain has voiced no opposition. In fact, several open statements have been made by heads of this chain welcoming it.

But a fight to the finish is in prospect on the Hearst chain.

Ralph Burgess, editorial writer of the Examiner, was discharged, obviously for guild activities. He was elected president of the Examiner chapter just prior to his dismissal.

Dean Jennings of the Call-Bulletin met the same brand of opposition when it became known that he planned to spend his vacation as an elected representative of the Bay Area Guild at the organization's first national convention.

Both Burgess and Jennings have appealed their cases to the N. R. A. board.

A month ago the guild held its first national convention in Minneapolis. The press wires carried detailed and unbiased accounts of the national meeting, with newspaper men from every section of the nation in attendance.

But no guild news from Minneapolis found its way into the columns of the San Francisco papers. Perhaps the publishers were too busy waging their grim battle with the windmills for "freedom of the press," guild members say.

Shortly after the Minneapolis conclave the publisher of a San Francisco Hearst paper, already ired by one clash with the guild in the Jennings episode, put on some plain and fancy high pressure, according to the guild.

He ranted that he could recruit the editorial force of this San Francisco paper over night with Los Angeles newspaper men if the gentlemen of the press got tough, is the way the story comes to the "Record."

A few employes close to the front office who had already joined the guild were called on the carpet. A few favors were promised here and there. As a result, these reporters started to spread the publisher's gospel among the other weak members of the staff and an avalanche of guild resignations followed. The publisher in question then went horseback riding.

Most of the reporters on this paper, however, had the guild interest at heart. They resigned under pressure, but are merely awaiting a favorable opportunity to reorganize.

DISHES TO HELP BUSY HOUSEWIFE

Some Suggestions on Preparing Quick Meals.

By EDITH M. BARBER

A NUMBER of requests from housewives interested in recipes for quick meals have been coming to me recently. For this reason the column today will be devoted to answering some of them.

One writer asks whether she may safely cook her cereal the night before keep it covered on the stove in an aluminum double boiler and reheat it the next morning. The answer is "yes." The cereal will be improved in flavor by the forehanded preparation.

"Do you peel an alligator pear before serving it with crabmeat? How is it eaten, with a spoon, salad fork, or oyster fork?" asks another reader. The pear is merely cut in half, the pit removed and the center filled with crabmeat, mixed with mayonnaise. It may be eaten with a salad fork, or if you happen to have those small fruit knives and forks, you may use them.

"I wonder if you can give me an old-time recipe for a dressing to serve with lettuce or dandelion greens. It is a hot dressing containing bacon, vinegar, sugar and perhaps an egg. I have hunted through every cook book without success. A friend's mother used to make it years ago." In answering this question, I might say I hunted for a long time for this recipe for myself and I found it finally in Germany last summer. I am very glad to share it with my readers. It is now one of the most precious recipes of my collection.

$600,000 Chewing Gum Exported to China in '33

Peiping.—Last year China imported $600,000 worth of chewing gum. This amount is estimated to total about 70,000,000 strips.

The traditional Chinese equivalent of gum is the watermelon seed, of which tons and tons are consumed each year throughout the width and breadth of this vast land.

While western movies and airplanes and bombs have made deep inroads into Chinese social customs, the chewing gum idea apparently has not made much progress, except possibly in the metropolis of Shanghai, which is reported to absorb about half the total gum imports.

Few Chinese pass a day without cracking a few dried seeds between their teeth, and it is estimated that every Chinese disposes of at least ten seeds a day. If an arbitrary population of 400,000,000 is accepted it will be seen that gum has a long way to go.

Except for Shanghai, the only other places in which chewing gum has been able to get a tooth-hold are Peiping, Tientsin and a few other cities of similar size. Out in the provinces the watermelon seed remains first in the affections of all Chinamen as a tasty pastime.

Boundary Dog Makes Knotty Tax Problem

Stoney Creek, Ont.—A dog lives in Stoney Creek—and thereby hangs a tale.

The home of the dog's master is on the township line, half in and half out of the village. So when the dog is in the front of the house he is a township dog, and when he is in the back he is a village pup.

The owner refuses to pay two taxes on one dog, and the dog refuses to stay in one end of the house. So the township assessor and the village assessor are trying to decide who should collect the tax.

When it is not in use cover your ironing board with a slip cover made of gingham or muslin to keep the board covering clean.

These appeal to youngsters very much: Place ball of ice cream on a plate, dip a toothpick or small brush in melted chocolate and paint on eyes, nose and mouth, then use an inverted cone for a hat and you have a jolly clown.

Do not put uncovered bottles of milk or cream in the refrigerator. Milk and cream readily absorb odors when left uncovered.

New Marking Makes Sun Dial Accurate as Clock

State College, Pa.—A simple system for making the readings of an ordinary sun dial as accurate as those of a synchronized clock has been perfected by Prof. Leland S. Rhodes, department of engineering, Pennsylvania state college.

To eliminate the sun dial error, which may be as much as fifty minutes, Professor Rhodes inscribed several half circles on the dial instead of the customary one, spacing them for the different seasons of the year. Across the ends of the half circles he marked the months and dates to which several semi-circles apply in computing the shadow reading in terms of standard time on a given day.

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

Dropped into the Little Church Around the Corner. A wedding ceremony was being performed in the Brides' chapel. Nothing new about that. There are many weddings at the church first made famous by the late Joseph Jefferson. Was told there were 30 or more weddings scheduled for tomorrow, Saturday, which is the most popular day. But the Little Church Around the Corner felt the depression severely indeed. In fact, if I am correctly informed, there was even a Saturday or two when there were no weddings. But now there is a rapid approach to the old average. So the country must once again be facing the sun since so many more young people are convinced that two can live as cheaply as one, or that the seas of matrimony are other than troubled.

Discreet inquiries here and there developed the fact that the increase in the number of weddings at the Little Church is not the only prosperity sign. The number of weddings with music has increased and oftentimes the large as well as the small chapel is used, with couples waiting their turn to face the altar. But that wasn't what I intended to say. Last year, a number of the couples, after the ceremony was performed, had to borrow car fare to get where they were going. So far this year, no money requests have followed ceremonies. And a reliable report has it that the amounts given the officiating clergymen are far larger than usual. So happy days are here again!

Speaking of churches, I am reminded of the clergyman over in New Jersey who at Easter time preached to an extremely large congregation. At the end of his sermon, he wished his parishioners a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. Puzzled, some waited and asked him what he meant by that. "Well," replied the parson, "there are only three times a year that I see so many of you, so I am anticipating our next meeting."

Returning rapidly to the City of the Seven Million, there were those five stalwart young men who rode to the top of the Empire State building. It being a chilly day, the guard on duty at that time on the one hundred and second floor stepped inside a minute to get warm. When he returned, he found to his horror that four of the five young men were taking their view of the surrounding scenery while standing on top of the narrow wall that keeps visitors from falling 1,250 feet, while the fifth was lying down on that same wall. The guard ordered them down in a hurry and when they alighted inquired angrily: "What are you, acrobats?" "No," replied the spokesman of the group. "We're Norwegian sailors and we often walk the bowsprit in a heavy sea yoost for fun!"

Robert J. Casey, journalist, artillery man in the World war, author and world traveler—he's varnished the labels on his portable typewriter so they'll stay on—has purchased chances on everything from safety razors to strings of pearls. Once upon a time, he took a chance on a piano and won it. He had a piano at home and couldn't use two, so he placed his prize in storage. That was 14 years ago. And ever since then he has been paying storage charges because he doesn't want to sell the only thing he's ever won!

But all her detectives could dig up on him was that he met the guy he said he was going to and landed a big contract. Ain't that the darnedest luck for her!"

HOW IT STARTED

By JEAN NEWTON

To Be "All Agog"

EVERY one of us, at some time or another, gets all agog.

We may get agog over a new ensemble, a new book or a new theory—any one or more of numberless things.

It is hardly likely, however, that we are set agog over the common variety of clover—yet that is how it started!

For the term "agog" comes to us from the French phrase "a gogo" meaning "in clover."

And the allusion is to the fact that when a horse is set grazing in clover studded pastures, he becomes all excited with eager expectation as he munches the delicious grasses.

Redhead Club Sees "Red" Over Accusations of Dye

Des Moines. — Thirteen flaming haired members of the Des Moines State House "Redhead Club" saw "red" recently when it was challenged that they were "dyed in the hair" rather than "dyed in the wool" redheads.

The accusation came on a post card signed "Katherine Hepburn." But the card was mailed in Des Moines. The author said she had been employed in the state house for several months.

Books Bought in 1876 for $27 Sold for $7,700

Philadelphia.—A net profit of $7,673 on a $27 investment was made here recently. In 1876 Joseph Parrish bought four volumes of "The History of the Reign of Emperor Charles Fifth" for $27. His daughter, Mrs. Marianna Parrish Kelley of Radnor, sold the books at auction, after she discovered they bore the autograph of George Washington. They brought her $7,700.

Liberty Bell Had Stormy History

THE history of the Liberty Bell, which now reposes in an honored spot in Independence hall, in Philadelphia, is a stormy one. It was in January, 1750, that the order for a bell to hang in the state house in Philadelphia, first was placed by officials of that institution.

The bell was purchased from a firm in London, England, but when it arrived in this country an error in the inscription was discovered and the bell itself cracked when first tested, in August, 1752.

The bell could not be transported back to England, and two Philadelphia men named Pass and Stow attempted to cast a new one, but it also was discovered to be imperfect. The bell was finally accepted in June, 1753, and put in its place in the tower of the building.

Included in items of expenses for making and hanging the bell, historical documents show, were potatoes, beef, hams, mustard, pepper, salt, butter, cheese, limes, bread, wood, earthenware, and beer and rum, the whole amount costing about $28.

Pass and Stow were paid about $300 for casting the bell.

The Liberty bell was not always treated with the reverence shown it now. One petition signed by residents of Philadelphia complained against the frequent ringing of the bell, calling it a "dangerous inconvenience."

Liberty Bell.

The bell was first rung July 8, 1776, to call the citizens together to hear the reading of the proclamation of the adoption of the Constitution.

The Liberty Bell was intimately associated with the continental army. The bell was taken to Allentown for safekeeping when the American forces were about to evacuate Philadelphia in 1777.

The Liberty Bell announced the surrender of Cornwallis, welcomed Washington, proclaimed victory and peace, mourned Washington, welcomed Lafayette, and mourned Franklin, Adams, Jefferson, and then Lafayette. All the great actors in the drama of independence had passed from the stage when the great bell rang for the last time.

July 8, 1835, 59 years to the day after the time of its historical first ringing, the Liberty Bell tolled for the last time and cracked half way up its side during the funeral of John Marshall, chief justice of the Supreme court of the United States.

The bell was removed from its steeple in 1781.

Today it is enclosed in a case in Independence hall, hanging from a heavy yoke supported by two bronze uprights. The case is of white oak, with plate glass panes, and the whole stands on a movable platform which can be run out of the building in case of fire.

The Liberty Bell is 12 feet in circumference around the lip and 7 feet, 6 inches around the crown. It is 3 inches thick in the part near the lip and 1¼ inches thick in the thinnest part toward the crown.

The clapper is 3 feet, 2 inches long, and the entire weight is 2,080 pounds. The bell is girdled by 15 narrow-ridged rings, and the edge is mutilated by the hacking of souvenir hunters in the days before the bell was put in the case. On its side is the long crack which distinguishes it from any other bell in the world.

Fourth, Lesson for Boys

July 4th commemorates for us a glorious national occasion. The names of our many loyal heroes come to our minds at the mention of Independence day. Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, Nathan Hale and George Washington, men loyal, with every fiber of their being. But do not forget that their lessons of loyalty were learned in school and at home and on the playground. No one could rise at one spring to the heights of patriotism and loyalty that these men displayed. But, like them, the boys of today can learn, can advance, step by step to the top, till they reach the full stature of American citizenship.

COUNTY HEALTH NEWS

Note: This is a weekly report from the San Mateo County Department of Public Health and Welfare, giving facts of importanec for health protection and a list of all contagious diseases reported to the County Health Officer in the previous week, as required by law.

SWIMMING POOLS

In the absence of Dr. Morrison, county health officer, who is in Los Angeles making a firsthand study of the poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis) situation, the present bulletin will deal with a timely subject, swimming pools.

During an outbreak of infantile paralysis, there is no topic more frequently discussed than that of the swimming pool in its relation, if any, to the spread of the disease.

Do swimming pools have any connection with infantile paralysis? The answer to this question will apply to any and all diseases. A pool maintained according to acceptable standards and regulations governing sanitation and general cleanliness is not likely to convey disease. Clean water, frequently changed or provided with a system of constant pumping and repurification is the principal requirement. Above all else, the water supply should be chlorinated properly. By this is meant the constant presence in the water of free chlorine in the amount of at least one tenth to two tenths parts per million. Roughly, this is equivalent to providing one pound of pure chlorine per day for a pool of 100,000 gallons capacity for average attendance. In terms of commercial sodium hypochlorite solution, which contains 20 per cent pure chlorine, five pints would therefore be required each day to disinfect such a pool.

When we consider that the chlorinated water in sanitary swimming pools is in a condition comparable with drinking water and that the disinfecting solution used is designed to maintain its germ-destroying action, the pool cannot be regarded as a vehicle of infection. Other sanitary precautions which are required by State regulation serve also to protect the public.

How, then, shall we answer the question. "Are swimming pools dangerous when infantile paralysis is prevalent?" It is an accepted fact that this disease is best avoided by shunning crowds, over-fatigue, chilling of the body and, most important of all, (avoiding) guarding against irritation of the mucous membranes of the nose and throat. Experience has shown that the swimming pool offers every opportunity for an infection which is likely to be brought on by one or more of these causes. Particularly is this true of respiratory diseases, of which infantile paralysis is one. It is known, for infantile paralysis germ or virus. Irritation of the nasal passages from constant washing and snuffing with water removes this natural protection and thus damages the barrier under such circumstances, as in diving or swimming, the disease is most readily introduced through the nose.

Lest there be some misunderstanding, it should be repeated here that swimming pools are not to be condemmed or in any manner blamed for spreading infantile paralysis. There is no proof that this is the case. We do know, however, the factors which favor breaking down bodily resistance to disease. Abuse of physical resources is quite likely in the pools because of the nature of the sport. Indulgence in this, as in all forms of excercise, should be tempered by intelligence and recognition of the facts pertaining to health and hygiene.

CONTRACTORS TO BE LICENSED

Unless contractors and builders in San Mateo county apply for renewal of their 1934-1935 state licenses, they will be unable to obtain contracts on new construction or home modernization under the vast government building program, it was announced today. Renewal petitions should be filed before Saturday.

Millions of dollars, state and federal officials said, will be expended in California within the next six months for new public works projects as well as the home alteration and modernization program approved last week by Congress and President Roosevelt.

Under federal regulation, it was stated, all contractors bidding on these jobs must be fully qualified, in addition to agreeing to comply with N. R. A. codes.

Col. Carlos W. Huntington, state registrar of contractors, today cautioned California's 22,000 contractors that they must apply for renewal of their state contractors licenses before midnight Saturday, at which time all licenses will become delinquent.

Under state law, all contractors must obtain a state license in order to qualify in the contracting business. It is a misdemeanor for a contractor to operate without a state license. The renewal fee is $5.00, while the statutory fee for delinquent licenses is $10.00.

Huntington said that applications should be mailed to the Sacramento offices of the registrar of contractors not later than midnight Saturday.

DAUGHTER OF COLMA PIONEER FAMILY WED

One of the attractive weddings of the early summer was that of Miss Ida Silicani and Mr. Joe Bruno on Saturday evening last.

Miss Silicani is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Silicani, pioneer residents of Colma.

The bride, given in marriage by her brother in law, William Nassano, wore an ivory satin gown made with a high neck in front and a monk's cowl in back. With this was worn a long tulle veil with a lace cap which was caught with pearls and lilies of the valley. Her bouquet was of gardenias, orchids and lilies of the valley.

Miss Elsie Silicani was maid of honor. She wore an attractive pink ruffled net dress and turban to match and carried a bouquet of pink roses tied with a beautiful pink how.

Mr. James Cancilla was best man.

After the wedding ceremony a supper was given at Joe Mendel's at the beach for friends and relatives.

After the supper a reception for relatives of the couple was held at the home of the parents o fthe groom on Treat avenue.

The guests attending were: Messrs. and Mesdames Joseph Bruno Jr., William Flynn, Sam Pedone, William Nassaon; Misses Elsie, Grace and Alice Silicani, Vivian Del Monte, Agnes Smith, Irene Williams, Louise Mariani, Dorothy Lowell, Lorraine Weldon and Mae Wilson; Messrs. Jay Cansilla, Peter Cancilla, Adolph Schenone, Dominic Rossi, Dominic Bruno, Sam Caruso, Andrew Tomasello, Matt Cortesi, Philip Cortesi, Joe Novello and Philip Nagolori.

Leaving by motor, the couple are spending two weeks in Yosemite, after which they will reside in their new apartment in San Francisco.

SIDELIGHTS

Many believe that the 1934 baseball season will be the last in which Babe Ruth will appear as a major league player. Ruth himself has intimated that this may be the case. But in an exhibition game with Newark the other day he hit two home runs. The Babe's peak salary was $80,000, in 1931. Last year he received $52,000, and his present contract calls for $35,000.

CLAY WILL BE CANDIDATE FOR JUSTICE OF THE PEACE

Attorney W. H. Clay, of Daly City, anounces that he is a candidate for the office of justice of the peace of the First Township of San Mateo county, at the primary election to be held on August 28, 1934. Many prominent residents of the First Township have sponsored his nomination and pledged their support of his candidacy.

If elected he will bring to the office the experience of over twenty-five years actual practice in the profession of the law, with the added qualities of henosty and integrity.—Advertisement.

JANE COWL WILL MAKE SHORT TOUR OF COAST

Lovely Jane Cowl, one of America's most distinguished dramatic stars, is coming to the Curran Theater, San Francisco, in Keith Winter's New York success, "The Shining Hour", which had such a long and successful run this season at the Booth Theater on Broadway.

The engagement of Miss Cowl promises to be a high-light in Pacific Coast theatricals. She has been signed up by Henry Duffy, the producer, for a brief tour of the leading cities on the coast starting in San Francisco at the Curran Theater on July 2.

Miss Cowl will be seen in the role of Mariella Linden, wife of a member of one of the Linden family, who are rated as gentlemen-farmers in Yorkshire, England. The role played by Miss Cowl is that of a sophisticated European who has elaborate and stunning gowns and costumes, and who brings life and pep into this staid household. In fact she brings too much life into this family, with the result that there are plenty of excitement and thrills during the play.

Henry Duffy is bringing a brilliant cast of players to be seen in support of Miss Cowl, including Pat Somerset, Joyce Carey, Frank Milan, Eily Malyon and Leo J. Carroll. The stage effects and settings are said to be magnificent. Russell Fillmore is responsible for the staging and directing of "The Shining Hour.'

Conrad Nagle and Violet Heming will conclude their two weeks' run at the Curran Theater, where they have been delighting audiences in the John van Druten comedy, "There's Always Juliet", with the matinee and evening performances on Saturday, June 30.
